SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE
Mercantile Beneficial Association
OF PHILADELPHIA.

IT is a fact, fresh in the remembrance of all, that at the period of your last annual meeting, the whole country was plunged into one of the most sudden, wide-spread and disastrous financial revulsions that was ever experienced by the commercial world. It swept like a tornado across the whole length and breadth of both hemispheres, leaving bankruptcy, ruin or distress, almost without exception, at every man's door. Every branch of industry, commerce and manufactures was not only checked, but almost completely prostrated. Despondency and gloom weighed heavily upon all, and none passed through this terrible ordeal without feeling its blighting effects. Commercial houses, whose strength was a by-word, suddenly and unexpectedly sunk beneath the blow. One after another of the most promising and profitable enterprises of the day fell, either crippled or destroyed. Those delicate but important links which connect together all the most intricate interests of trade were completely severed, and all was confusion and doubt. Hundreds of those who held subaltern positions of clerks, salesmen or operatives were unexpectedly thrown out of employment. If it was a loss to the wealthy, it was more than a loss to the comparatively indigent,—it was taking away the only staff they had for support. Their daily bread depended upon their daily industry,—and a single week of idleness was often sufficient to darken the hearthstone of many an industrious and worthy family.

This alarming crisis may well have caused your previous Board to express their apprehension that the demands upon your treasury would be largely increased the present year; and from the report of your Relief Committee it appears that these fears were well-founded, for the number relieved, and the sum dispensed to those whose pressing necessities compelled them to apply for pecuniary aid, is augmented beyond that of any previous year. Let not those, however, who have escaped this terrible panic, flatter themselves that they will always be exempt from calamity or misfortune. It may come when they feel perfectly secure and least expect it, and they too be reduced to destitution and suffering. That man does not exist, who can claim for himself, that prosperity will always continue to smile on his possessions or guarantee his happiness. His wealth may be large and ample, but if ventured upon the speculative and uncertain exigencies of trade, its fate may readily be one of hopeless disaster.

Your Relief Committee report that the whole number who have drawn on the fund during the past year has been twenty-four, a number surprisingly small when compared with a membership of one thousand persons, and yet, as far as we are able to judge, every case that could fairly present a just claim to relief was favorably responded to at once. The amount disbursed by the same committee since our last report is two thousand and fifty-five dollars, the largest sum appropriated in any one year since the organization of the Society, and more than double that distributed in the previous year. This was to be expected,—and our only surprise is that so small a portion of the members, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, were obliged to ask for assistance. It might readily have been supposed that during a period of such unexampled embarrassment the requisition for aid would have been not only large enough to absorb the entire current income of the Association, but to have made a marked impression on its invested fund. That it has not been so, we have to thank God for shielding us from the utmost power of the storm, and to the indomitable spirit which seemed to animate, not only the members of this Society, but the whole business community of the city. Nearly every man resolutely placed his hand to the wheel, and, although willing to receive support when absolutely required, still manfully lent his own strength to the task, as the most honorable means to redeem what was either in danger, or had been unfortunately lost.

Most of the applications to the Relief Committee were doubly recommended by the fact that their distress was occasioned by sickness of themselves or family, which always adds largely to expenses. So long as man has health in possession, he bears a shield which almost entirely protects him in this great battle of life, but when broken down himself, and the economy of his household deranged by disease, he is helpless indeed, especially if his pecuniary resources have been totally absorbed. To such your Committee have always felt disposed to extend the utmost relief in their power, not only as a right to which the recipient is entitled, but as an acknowledgment of that mysterious entail which in weal or in woe, is the common heritage of man.

In the distribution of the fund, your Committee have also been governed by a policy which experience has proved to be wise,—and that is, to extend aid to as great a number as possible, instead of concentrating it in large amounts to but few cases. The sums granted have ranged from twenty-five dollars to one hundred and fifty, amounts not great in themselves, but always sufficient to meet the most pressing wants of the applicant. This Society was not originated for the purpose of affecting the more important vicissitudes of life, as manifested in an extended commerce, but merely as a relief for temporary distress. Its ministering hand will scarcely be found in the bustling mart of trade,—the ware-room or the exchange,—but if its influence is felt in the family circle, or by the humble fire-side of the afflicted, its design will be realized and its object gained.

The eventful history of the year through which we have just passed,—its fluctuations and changes,—show the necessity of having and sustaining an institution like that of the Mercantile Beneficial Association. We are all so entirely subject to circumstances which we often cannot control, that it is a wise policy to provide for contingencies which are not the less frequent from the fact of there being unforeseen. Many have experienced the timely benefits of our Society that probably never dreamed they should need its sustaining and comforting aid. In the full confidence of manhood, they willingly contributed to the fund, without supposing for a moment they should ever need support themselves. But there is no condition in life in which man is entirely independent of his fellows. As a link in the great chain of creation, he is only in his natural position when placed in connexion with others. If he could possibly divest himself of all communion with the world, his life would be a blank, and his existence an anomaly. And this very dependence is the key to all his success in life as well as all his happiness. When the fiat went forth that each one should do unto others as he would that others should do unto him, it opened a fountain out of which sprung a thousand blessings for his race. When God required that men should love one another, it was but a manifestation of that Divine goodness that has been so mercifully bestowed by the great Author of his being.

It is with no small degree of regret and mortification that your Board are obliged to Report, after so frequently and earnestly urging the subject upon the attention of the members, that they have not noticed, during the past year, any more successful or efficient working of the Registry department than formerly. This feature of our Association is entirely under-valued, and its great importance much disregarded, or certainly more encouragement would be given to it by those who are in a position to render it effectively operative. Unless those whose wants require them to employ assistants will make it the medium through which those wants may be supplied, it never can be expected to succeed. Self-reliance should be a maxim with all men, and the best principle of giving relief to young men particularly, is to place them in a situation to help themselves. Pecuniary aid, in many cases, we are aware, is indispensable, but assistance to find them honorable and permanent employment, or bestow a word of affectionate encouragement, or of good counsel, is often far better. If this be true, is it not strange that so valuable an auxilliary for doing so much practical good, should be so sadly neglected, when the means are so easily accessible? No reasonable excuse can possibly be advanced for this apathy, and your Board are convinced that, with proper attention, this department could be made productive of all the great advantages claimed for it by its friends.

The accompanying report of the Treasurer shows that the receipts for the year, for dues, interest, &c., amount to two thousand nine hundred and thirty-five dollars and seventy-five cents, and the total sum at present in his hands, including permanent investments, is eleven thousand five hundred and six dollars and four cents.

The number of life and annual contributing members now on our list, is NINE HUNDRED AND NINETY-EIGHT.

This number is probably greater than that of any kindred Association in this city; yet still we know of no sound reason why it should not be very materially increased. The object of the Society is unquestionably a noble and philanthropic one, and the beneficent influence it is quietly and effectively exercising in our midst, and the small annual subscription required to sustain it, ought to be sufficient inducements for every one engaged in the mercantile profession to give it his liberal and cordial support.

The peculiar interest which this Association has always manifested in regard to the intellectual and moral welfare of minors engaged in mercantile pursuits, is sufficient evidence that it is not unmindful of the vast importance of their claims. Convinced by every day's sad observation, that this interesting class of our profession, especially those who are without proper parental care and training, are fearfully exposed to the seductive snares and temptations which beset them at every turn in as populous a city as this, the Society was solicitous of devising some means of protecting and elevating them superior to these formidable and appalling evils. With this view, the subject was discussed at the last annual meeting of the Association, and a resolution was adopted to refer the matter to the Board of Managers, with instructions to consider and digest some plan by which their wishes could be successfully carried into effect. Immediately upon the organization of the present Board, a committee, composed of gentlemen of intelligence and sound judgment, whose feelings and sympathies were warmly enlisted in the cause, were appointed, to take the matter into consideration. After numerous meetings, and a full discussion of its merits, the committee were reluctantly compelled to abandon their labors, and report that no feasible plan could be proposed, the practical operation of which would be satisfactory to the Association.

It was with extreme regret that your Board were thus obliged to resign their efforts in behalf of that portion of our community, whose success and welfare in life they had so much at heart. If, however, in the wisdom of the Association, any method can be suggested by which any thing can be done to effect this laudable purpose, it will doubtless meet with the most hearty co-operation of your Board.

The duties and responsibilities of your Board here close. With what fidelity and judgment the trust over which they have had charge has been performed, is for you alone to decide. But, in the earnest hope that an institution so purely benevolent in its character, and which has been the means of accomplishing so much good in the past, and is so full of promise for the future, may continue to increase both in numbers and usefulness, they respectfully resign their administration into the hands of those whom your election may this day appoint.

WILLIAM C. LUDWIG,
PRESIDENT.

After the reading of the Report of the Board of Managers, the Statement of the Treasurer of the Association was received and read, when both were unanimously adopted.

The meeting then went into an election for a Board of Managers to serve for the ensuing year, and the following gentlemen were returned as duly elected.
